Promising ideaBy A LockwoodI liked the idea of this film script; a young student takes a drug addict as the subject of a film project. His reason for doing this is rooted in his own family's history with drug addiction. We meet Simon, an addict who is manipulative but also very charming and fun. He is always on the look-out for money for his next hit and seems to care little who he borrowed and stole from. I found this quite a hard book to review as I'm not that familiar with reading film scripts. It was a little hard to get into a flow of a story as it was broken up with setting the scene etc. The main reason I only gave 3 stars is that I think it needs more work. I'm not entirely sure who this is aimed at. If it is a cautionary tale for the high-school student, I would take out the swearing and pot smoking. If it is aimed at adults, I would go more gritty and flesh out the dialogue. Promising idea that could be worked at when actually making a film. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Everyone knows a Simon! By Frugal-Writer I must admit; this is the first screenplay I've written. The story revolves around Kevin, a documentarian apprentice who sets out on a journey that, while well-intended, threatens to go topsy-turvy. Along the way of his discovery, you experience a mix of emotions: admiration, impatience and anger, just to name a few. At times, the story feels disjointed, but perhaps it's my lack of assimilation to screenplays. Other than that, Joe's work is amazing in how he takes you through a journey of discovery and how he learns in quick order that you shouldn't judge a book by its cover. Simon, who you'll learn to love and hate, is another character, altogether. Good work Mr. Osborne!

For a final college presentation Kevin decides to do a documentary on a drug addict. The project stirs up old demons and presents new dangers.
