Then, sergeant Belcore appears, and he attempts to seduce Adina who is the most beautiful lady in this village. He offer marriage to her. Andina politely tells him that she will think it over. Nemorino is frustrated by the appearance of a masculine rival. A traveling purveyor of medicines, Dulcamara, arrives in the village. He advertises a potion capable of curing anything. Nemorino asks him if he has the elixir of love, which Tristan took. Actually, Dulcamara is an impostor. He sells Nemorino a bottle of cheap wine, and explains to him, This elixir will have an effect on you, tomorrow. Dulcamara intends to run away before this day is over. Nemorino tells Adina that she will fall in love with him the next day. Adina gets angry. She declares she is going to marry the sergeant Belcore, this day. Nemorino begs her to wait till the next day as he has a sick uncle and must go to take care of him. But Adina ignores him as she says that he has no time to love her. Nemorino also notices her tears, and understands their meaning. Sgt. Belcore arrives to see the two in each others arms. Adina apologizes to him, and Belcore takes the news very well. He proclaims there are thousands of women in the world he can choose to marry. Adina pays Nemorinos sign-up bonus back to the sergeant, and marries Nemorino. After all, Dulcamaras elixir has an effect. Dulcamara peacefully leaves the village, not before selling dozens of bottles.
