There are a few chuckles and smiles, but I was hoping for some raucous belly-laughs and was thus disappointed. Oh, well.

Received this promptly and it was as promised. I gave the first "NPR Driveway Moments" and this one, "More...Moments" to my son for Christmas. He actually called me this week and thanked me for the gift as he is enjoying it immensely. He even posted something about it on his facebook status. Pretty sweet for an old mom.

love listening to NPR but this CD left me hanging high and dry. Not even remotely funny or entertaining. Save your bucks..listen to the radio version instead.

Most NPR listeners have experienced at least one driveway moment: You're so captivated by a story, interview, or essay you're hearing on the radio that you sit in your driveway, motor running, to hear it all the way through. Even if the ice cream is melting in the trunk. The latest collection of this best-selling series features memorable tales, bits, and commentary from NPR favorites, regulars, and guests. Smartly chosen, sincerely hilarious, this collection will leave you in stitches.

From Publishers Weekly Perhaps NPR should have stopped after its first collection of funniest driveway moments because this second installment--featuring such comedic heavyweights as Joan Rivers, Harry Shearer, and Carol Burnett--curiously falls flat. Culled from a variety of NPR programs, the compilation has its high points: NBC's Brian Williams has a memorable turn on Wait, Wait... Don't Tell Me, Carol Burnett is charming as she looks back on her career, and Harry Shearer certainly entertains when discussing flame-retardant salmon. However, the collection has an equal number of misses--John Hodgman's fake facts prove tiring, and too many vignettes are devoted to dissecting humor rather than delivering it. (Oct.) This enthusiastically recommended production will captivate commuting listeners into lingering in their driveways long after they've reached their destination. Library Journal [starred review]
